Introduction

Agribusiness with its mass employment forcing and social hierarchy, as well as the mass production of agricultural products, led to the industrial revolution, as in a period with almost no other alternatives for the industry and the economy, leading to a period of rapid technological change. The Chinese and the Japanese, who had already adopted the technology, led the way in the 19th century. Child Labour & The Industrial Revolution

During the 1800s the Industrial Revolution spread throughout Britain. The use of steam-powered machines, led to a massive increase in the number of factories (particularly in textile factories or mills).

From Country to Town

As the number of factories grew people from the countryside began to move into the towns looking for better paid work. The wages of a farm worker were very low and there were less jobs working on farms because of new machines. Thousands of new workers were needed to work machines in mills and foundries and the factory owners built houses for them. At the start of the 19th Century about 1/5 of Britain's population lived there, but by 1851 half the population of the country had set up home in London. People crowded into already crowded houses. Rooms were rented to whole families or perhaps several families. If there were no rooms to rent, people stayed in lodging houses.

Housing

The worker's houses were usually near to the factories so that people could walk to work. They were built really quickly and cheaply. The houses were cheap, most had between 2-4 rooms - one or two rooms downstairs, and one or two rooms upstairs. Victorian families were big with 4 or 5 children. There was no running water or toilet. A whole street would have to share an outdoor pump and a couple of outside toilets. Most houses in the North of England were "back to backs" (built in double rows) with no windows at the front, no backyards and a sewer down the middle of the street. The houses were built

Agricultural Revolution

- More food was available.
- Food production increased over 60% during the 1700s; twice the rate between the 1500s and 1700s.
- Introduction of new crops, Columbian Exchange, from the New World.
- English farmers began to raise potatoes which proved cheap and nourishing.
- Other new crops indirectly benefitted humans as they improved animal feed: corn, buckwheat, carrots and cabbage.
- This new animal feed produced larger quantities of better tasting meat and milk.
